

HOW THE NCAA WORKS: Division I

When people think about college sports, they most often think about Division I. Its teams are usually the ones broadcast on television, they have the highest profile, and they are frequently subjected to public scrutiny.

The division is home to a wide range of schools with varying missions, admissions standards and athletics budgets. It includes some of the most highly selective universities in the country, and others with open admission.

Despite the differences, Division I schools share a commitment to the well-being of student-athletes, to creating sound academic standards and to promoting fairness.

Led by the overall strategic vision of the Division I Board of Directors, composed mostly of university presidents, the Division I governance structure provides autonomy for the 65 schools in the Atlantic Coast, Big Ten, Big 12, Pac-12 and Southeastern conferences to vote on rule changes in specific categories. The rest of the division is then free to follow those adopted rules.

When governing itself on issues outside the areas of autonomy, though, Division I operates much like the other two divisions: Representatives serve on NCAA committees that determine the division's direction and develop legislation. Members of the Division I Council vote on these proposals. Both processes often work together to reach a positive outcome for college athletes.

These committees are among the Division I committees that report to the Legislative Committee.

Committee on Student-Athlete Reinstatement

Decides all matters related to reinstating a Division I college athlete's eligibility.

Committee for Legislative Relief

Makes final decisions on waiver requests in which no other committee or conference has authority.

Coaches and others knowledgeable about a particular sport make up committees that recommend to the Competition Oversight Committee where and when each Division I and National Collegiate championship should take place and who should compete.

START

Rule-making starts with the schools and athletics conferences that belong to Division I. If an athletics director wants to change recruiting legislation, for example, the idea could be introduced through the committee structure.

An individual conference can introduce an idea as legislation. Those proposals are reviewed by Division I committees, but regardless of their feedback, the Division I Council votes on all conference-sponsored legislation.

Besides the various required roles, the NCAA also works to ensure gender, racial and geographic diversity on its committees. Many of those diversity standards are mandated by legislation.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS

The Board of Directors is the top governing body for Division I, responsible for strategy and policy and overseeing legislation and management of the division.

- ◆ Focuses on strategic topics in college sports and their relationship to higher education.
- ◆ Approves an annual budget.
- ◆ Monitors legislation to ensure it does not conflict with policies and goals.
- ◆ Adopts legislation when significant values are at stake or an issue requires fast action that does not allow use of the regular legislative process.
- ◆ Reviews and approves policies and procedures governing the infractions program.
- ◆ Collaborates with NCAA staff on how the national office can best serve Division I members.

Made up of 32 presidents and chancellors representing each conference, it is the primary advisory body to the board.

24 members:
20 presidents, 1 from each FBS conference and 10 seats rotating among the remaining 22 conferences

Committee on Academics

Primary academic authority for Division I, managing eligibility standards and the Academic Performance Program. Its work is subject to review by the Board of Directors, and it can recommend legislation to the Council.

20 members:

These committees report to the Board of Directors to ensure it is aware of infractions issues.

Committee on Infractions

Participates in hearings involving Division I schools accused of violating NCAA rules.

Infractions Appeals Committee

Hears and acts on appeals of decisions by the Committee on Infractions.

The Council has primary legislative authority for Division I, although its work is subject to review by the Board of Directors, which monitors legislation to ensure it does not conflict with the division's policies and goals.
