Application Process

The application process follows the same timeline each year:

Aug. 1 or earlier: Applicant submits an application and supplemental materials to the NCAA office of inclusion. The completed application must be sent in electronic format (for example, flash drive) to the individual below:

Jean Merrill

jmerrill@ncaa.org

NCAA office of inclusion

Attn: Jean Merrill

1802 Alonzo Watford Sr. Drive

Indianapolis, IN 46202

Phone: 317-917-6642

September/October: Committee on Women's Athletics conducts initial review of application during fall committee meeting.

February: Committee completes full review of application.

March: Committee sends a summary of preliminary findings to the applicant. The summary of findings may include an invitation for the applicant to attend the committee's spring meeting.

April: Committee makes final decision on application during spring committee meeting. If invited, an applicant may attend the committee meeting to discuss in detail the application and the applicant sport's viability as an emerging sport for women.

June 15: Applicant receives final decision, including whether the committee will recommend legislation to propose the applicant sport be added as an emerging sport for women through the appropriate governance and legislative processes for Divisions I, II and III.

Annually: If accepted into the Emerging Sports for Women program, representatives of the emerging sport must provide a progress report to the committee before the fall and spring meetings.

Application Review

The Committee on Women's Athletics will evaluate an applicant sport's potential to be sponsored by at least 40 NCAA institutions at the varsity level within the 10-year period. As part of its evaluation, the committee may consider an applicant sport's application within the following contexts:

- a. Health and safety.
- b. Diversity and Inclusion
- c. Growth potential at the high school and post-collegiate levels.
- d. Economic viability.
- e. NCAA governance and legislative priorities.
- f. Other applicant sports pursuing membership in the Emerging Sports for Women program.
- g. Level of support from the sport's national governing body or national association or organization.

The Committee on Women's Athletics and NCAA staff will provide feedback on all submitted application materials and may request additional information

Application Reconsideration

Applicants may request reconsideration of a committee decision only if new information is presented that was not reasonably available at the time of the original decision. Reconsideration may be requested by emailing or mailing a letter to the Committee on Women's Athletics via NCAA staff within 30 calendar days from the time a written decision is sent to applicants. An explanation must be submitted to clarify the reasons the new information was not originally available. Any additional or repetitive information that was originally available to the committee may not be submitted for reconsideration. The chair of the Committee on Women's Athletics shall determine if the new information standard is met for all reconsideration submissions. If the reconsideration request is met, the Committee on Women's Athletics will reconsider the new information and render a decision based on all of the information, including the new information submitted.

Emerging Sports Governance and Legislative Process

If the Committee on Women's Athletics supports an applicant sport to be added to the Emerging Sports for Women program, the committee will make a recommendation to Divisions I, II and III. Pursuant to governance and legislative processes, each division will determine whether an applicant sport will be added to the division's Emerging Sports for Women list and legislation.

Committee Monitoring and Support of Emerging Sports

The Committee on Women's Athletics manages the Emerging Sports for Women program, and the NCAA staff provides day-to-day support and guidance for emerging sports. The committee regularly reviews the status and progress of emerging sports for women and engages in dialogue with emerging sport representatives.

The committee uses the NCAA Sports Sponsorship Database to accurately identify the number of NCAA institutions that sponsor each emerging sport at the varsity level.

The committee may request specific information when conducting a review of an emerging sport for women. Typically, the committee requests the following information:

- a. Number of NCAA institutions (by division) that sponsor the emerging sport at the varsity level.
- b. Number of varsity student-athletes at NCAA institutions participating in the emerging sport (including data on race and ethnicity).
- c. Number of club teams.
- d. Number of NCAA conferences that have added the emerging sport.
- e. Description of national or conference championship opportunities.
- f. Summary of efforts by the emerging sport's representatives to grow the sport.

Championship Sport Governance Process

The Committee on Women's Athletics may recommend an emerging sport become a championship sport to Divisions I, II and III through the respective governance and legislative processes when at least 40 NCAA institutions sponsor the sport at the varsity level (as reflected in the NCAA Sports Sponsorship Database).

Requirements To Remain in the Emerging Sports for Women Program

The Emerging Sports for Women program was developed for emerging sports to achieve NCAA championship status within 10 years. A sport can remain in the Emerging Sports for Women program after 10 years if the Committee on Women's Athletics determines that the sport has demonstrated steady growth during that time.

Examples of growth include (but are not limited to) the following:

- a. Annual increase of NCAA institutions that sponsor the emerging sport at the varsity level.
- b. Increased student-athlete participation opportunities at NCAA institutions.

- c. Engagement with NCAA institutions to grow the emerging sport.

If the committee determines that the emerging sport is not making steady progress at the end of the 10-year period, it may recommend to each division that the sport be removed from the Emerging Sports for Women program in accordance with the governance and legislative processes for each division.

A sport that is removed from the Emerging Sports for Women program and the applicable divisional legislation may seek reinstatement. At least 12 months must pass after the effective date of removal from the program and legislation. The criteria for the application remain the same except the application must include 15 letters of commitment from NCAA institutions that either sponsor the applicant sport at the varsity level at the time of application or intend to sponsor the applicant sport at the varsity level during the academic year in which the application is reviewed. Additionally, the application must explain what circumstances have changed since the applicant sport's removal from the program. For applicant sports that have been removed from a specific division, the 15 letters of commitment must be from NCAA institutions in that division.

Branding for Emerging Sports

The NCAA has developed licensing and marketing programs that make use of NCAA trademarks and championship marks. Such programs are closely monitored to ensure consistency with the purposes and objectives of the NCAA, its members institutions and conferences and higher education.

Representatives of emerging sports for women must refrain from any direct or indirect use of the NCAA's marks and logos unless they have obtained prior consent from the NCAA. Requests for consent must be submitted to the NCAA via the NCAA Content Request Form. All such requests will be conditioned on approval with the NCAA Content License terms and conditions, a copy of which will be provided to the requestor on conditional approval. The NCAA may revoke its consent to the use of NCAA logos or trademarks at any time.

In limited circumstances, with prior written approval, the NCAA may make available to emerging sport representatives one or more of the following logos identifying the status of Emerging Sports for Women.

Logos for specific emerging sports as of 2020

Rugby

An NCAA Emerging Sport for Women

Triathlon

An NCAA Emerging Sport for Women

Women's Wrestling

An NCAA® Emerging Sport for Women

On receipt of NCAA written consent, examples of acceptable use of these logos may include placement on letterhead for correspondence to NCAA institutions and conferences about the emerging sport (along with the primary organization's logo) and on a webpage maintained by the emerging sport's representatives to provide information to NCAA institutions and conferences.

Under no circumstances may emerging sport representatives use any NCAA logo or trademark in conjunction with an athletic competition in the emerging sport or in any manner that suggests a relationship between the NCAA and any corporate entity (including but not limited to any corporate sponsor of an emerging sport).

If a sport is removed from the Emerging Sports for Women program, all use of NCAA logos or trademarks in connection with that sport must cease.

Publicity for Emerging Sports

Publicity is important to the growth and success of an emerging sport. The governing body of an emerging sport is encouraged to create its own national media list and social media platforms to regularly publicize rankings, regular-season competitions and student-athlete achievements. However, an emerging sport may partner with the NCAA public and media relations group and social media team in the following ways:

- a. Provide a news release that points to a rise of NCAA institutions that sponsor an emerging sport at the varsity level.
- b. Provide information about NCAA student-athletes (or former NCAA student-athletes) who also participate in an emerging sport.
- c. Provide information about an emerging sport's scheduled national championship.

Compliance With NCAA Rules for Emerging Sports

NCAA institutions that sponsor an emerging sport for women at the varsity level must abide by all NCAA regulations, including playing and practice seasons, financial aid, recruiting, eligibility and amateurism. Violations of NCAA legislation related to an emerging sport for women should be reported and addressed in the same manner as rules violations of NCAA championship sports.

The NCAA Divisions I, II and III manuals contain legislation about the Emerging Sports for Women program. Representatives of emerging sports for women should refer to the NCAA Legislation and Interpretations when seeking additional information about NCAA legislation.
